This year, Sunday, April 29 marks the 95th annual Opening Day on the Bay. The main event is the decorated boat parade and blessing of the fleet. From noon to 3 p.m., spectators will gather at Crissy Field to watch over 120 yachts strut their stuff in single file along the San Francisco waterfront. This year's theme is "American Spirit," with an aim towards celebrating the many people and properties that make San Francisco so unique. Photo courtesy of PICYA

511 Traveler Info System Offers Powerful New Smartphone App

BY CRAIG NOBLE

The Bay Area's 511 traveler information system is now offering its first smartphone app for transit riders. The free 511 Transit App is a multiple-agency public transit trip planner using GPS-based location tools for smartphones. Ideal for a daily commute, weekend errand or occasional trip, the app serves both residents and visitors who are planning transit trips within the nine-county region.

"We are pleased to offer this unique and powerful tool for transit riders in the Bay Area," said Adrienne J. Tissier, chair of the Metropolitan Transportation Commission

(MTC). "Now you can use one app to plan trips on more than 30 public transit agencies, accessing the most complete coverage for the San Francisco Bay Area."

The free 511 Transit App is available both for the Android operating system, through Google Play (formerly the Android Market), and for the iPhone through the iPhone App Store using an iTunes account and by searching for "511 Transit." The new app provides door-to-door transit trip planning and scheduled departure times for transit routes near your location or from a location you specify. It includes information for 720 routes and more than 23,700 transit stops throughout the region. An interactive, dynamic map shows routes and stops along the way, as well as your current position while on the move. Walking directions to and from stops and fares (including transfers) are also displayed.

"Smartphones and on-the-go trip planning are becoming increasingly common, and 511 is now extending its Bay Area transit planning tools to these faster, more compact platforms," said Tom Spiekerman, 511 Transit project manager. "Currently, 511 customers plan more than one million transit trips per month using the popular website version of the 511 Trip Planner. The new app brings core features of this tool to customers on the go."

Additional app features include:

- Recently viewed locations and trips are saved automatically, as well as favorites.
- GPS positioning enables users to set their current location as a starting point for a trip, or to find nearby stops and transit routes with scheduled departure times.
- The app incorporates transit agency announcements that may affect a trip's itinerary.

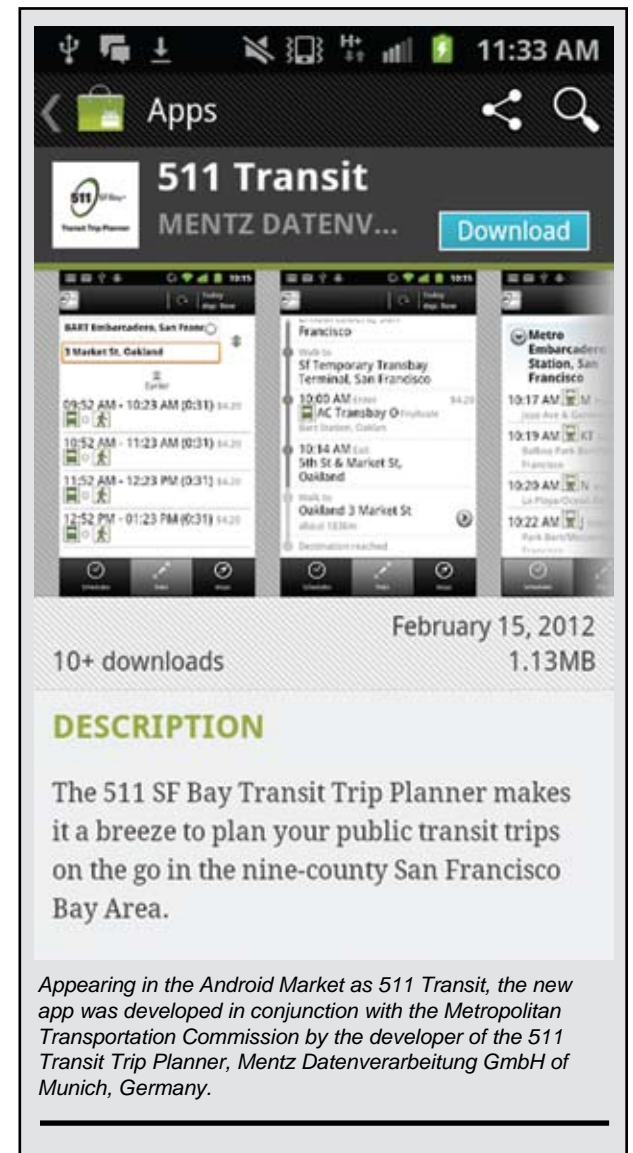

511 Transit App customers are able to provide feedback on the new app by clicking on the "Help/Info" button to send an email to the 511 Team.

The new app complements numerous options people already have to access 511 traveler information. Smartphone and other mobile phone users may access many of 511's most popular features through the mobile 511 site (m.511.org), by calling 511 from any Bay Area phone, or by receiving real-time transit Departure Times texts (SMS). Desktop users can access the information from 511.org.

The 511 Transit App includes data from SF Muni, BART, AC Transit, VTA, SamTrans, Caltrain, Golden Gate Transit, County Connection, Vallejo Transit, LAVTA, Sonoma County Transit, VINE (Napa County) and more than a dozen additional agencies. For a complete list of all transit agencies included in the 511 Transit app, please visit the trip planning page at 511.org.

Apart from the new smartphone app, 511 is a one-stop phone and web source for up-to-the-minute Bay Area traffic, transit, rideshare and bicycling information. It's free of charge and available 24 hours a day, seven days a week from anywhere in the nine-county Bay Area. 511 is managed by a partnership of public agencies led by the Metropolitan Transportation Commission, the California Highway Patrol, and the California Department of Transportation.

DESCRIPTION

The 511 SF Bay Transit Trip Planner makes it a breeze to plan your public transit trips on the go in the nine-county San Francisco Bay Area.

Appearing in the Android Market as 511 Transit, the new app was developed in conjunction with the Metropolitan Transportation Commission by the developer of the 511 Transit Trip Planner, Mentz Datenverarbeitung GmbH of Munich, Germany.

The 511 Transit app provides easy-to-read maps to help riders navigate the region on transit.

Using GPS technology, the 511 Transit app includes detailed walking directions to the appropriate bus stop, train station or ferry landing.

Senior Captain Chuck Elles

BY MATT LARSON

Chuck Elles is Blue & Gold Fleet's Senior Captain. With 32 years at the company, he has first dibs on the late afternoon/early evening Vallejo ferry shift.

But with power comes responsibility, and Captain Elles' role is no different. He recently returned from a special trip to Seattle, and he brought with him the refitted Intintoli.

"We made it in 48 hours," Elles said. "It was carefully planned. We took the long-range forecast, found a weather window that worked and it was pretty mellow—perfect offshore conditions. It felt great driving the boat under the Golden Gate Bridge back up to Vallejo." The Intintoli was fully restored with a refurbished engine, new deck, new carpet, new seats and flat-screen TVs for the passengers, among others. "It's state-of-the-art," said Elles. "It's my new favorite boat."

Over the past 13 months, Elles made several trips up to Seattle to test the newly installed control systems on the Intintoli. Now that it's returned, the Mare Island is next in about eight months. "It's rewarding for me to improve the ferry service," he said. "To see a refurbished boat come back into the loop, it's just nice to see that things are constantly getting better." But Elles isn't the only one to thank for the quality of the ferry system.

"I have the utmost respect for our engineering staff at Baylink," Elles said. "If something's broken, it's fixed the next day. They're the best in the business." And having a great crew means that Elles can man the helm to the best of his ability. "It makes me feel confident about running the boat, concentrating on navigating the vessel and doing my job, because I know everything down below is done right and in good working condition." And as far as the general upkeep of the place, Elles said, "You can eat off the deck plates down in the engine room. It's that clean."

He also commends the management staff for not only listening to the ideas and input from the captains and crews, but actually acting upon it. A new feature on the Intintoli is a large front window in the wheelhouse, resulting in two window frames being removed. "It improves safety and visibility at high speed," Elles said. "That was my idea, and I'm glad I got it."

It is important to have a healthy relationship with co-workers, and it seems that's always been the case with Blue & Gold Fleet. In fact, Elles met his wife in that very environment. "I was her deckhand," he said. "She was one of the first female captains on the Bay at Blue & Gold. When we were married we were declared by the officiant: captain and captain." They currently reside in Napa and have two twin daughters who work in Washington, D.C.

A Philadelphia native and former Heavenly Valley ski instructor, Elles maintains an active lifestyle. Be it snow skiing, marathon running or hundred-mile bike riding, "I don't like to sit around too much," he said. Some people may also remember Elles as part of the Pier 39 Ski Extravaganza; it lasted four months in 1979. "It was a two-story high ski jump that we went off of, did flips and landed into a giant airbag. We thrilled the crowd!"

Keeping unnecessary thrills away from the ferryboat's waterways, Elles sits comfortably at his midday shift. "I worked the morning shift for 10 years," he said. "I enjoy sleeping in a little bit now." And after 32 years with Blue & Gold, he still looks forward to watching the sunset from the wheelhouse. "Probably the favorite part of my day is watching the sun go down behind Mount Tam," he said. "I'm just happy to be up there."

Elles humbly accepts the accolades that come with his lengthy service to the commuter community, but he still puts the credit of his career on the crew. "It wouldn't be possible if it wasn't for the excellent engineering staff and management staff at Baylink and Blue & Gold," he said. "I'm beating the heck out of that, but it's the truth. They are the unsung heroes."

Foreign Trade Driving Growth at Bay Area Ports

BY PATRICK BURNSON

The U.S. Department of Commerce recently approved the Port of San Francisco's request to reorganize its Foreign Trade Zone (FTZ) #3 under the new Alternative Site Framework (ASF) program.

According to Port spokesmen, the new process requires less paperwork and streamlines the procedure for businesses to apply for a zone. The new ASF program allows existing companies and new companies in San Francisco and San Mateo counties to secure FTZ status within approximately 30 days from when an application is accepted.

Ten container terminals and two intermodal rail facilities serve the Oakland waterfront. Oakland's cargo volume makes it the fourth busiest container port in the United States.

Without the program, the process can take 8-12 months.

A Foreign Trade Zone is a secured area in a designated customs "port of entry," and while physically located within the United States, it is considered outside U.S. Customs territory. This allows for foreign goods to be brought into FTZs without formal customs entry for manufacturing, testing, assembly, processing, storage, and distribution. Duty payments on imported goods and materials can be reduced or eliminated, or deferred until they leave the designated area and enter U.S. commerce. Goods not entering U.S. commerce, for instance re-exports, are not obligated to pay customs duties.

The Alternative Site Framework program expands upon the benefits already granted within the FTZ program in an efficient way. Companies have the advantage to extend the FTZ benefits to their own already-existing manufacturing, processing and distribution locations within San Francisco and San Mateo counties, yet outside of the Port of San Francisco.

"The new expedient process gives San Francisco and San Mateo companies a competitive advantage, especially when competing on a global scale," said Peter Dailey, maritime director for the Port of San Francisco. "Foreign Trade Zones are one tool to reduce logistics costs, which translates into savings to a company's bottom line. More competitive companies translate into new economic opportunities and help create new jobs."

While San Francisco's waterfront cargo operations are dwarfed by neighboring Oakland, it remains a viable "niche" gateway. Late last year, Secretary of Transportation Ray LaHood announced that the Port of San Francisco would be awarded nearly $3 million for rail improvements aimed at improving segments of its freight rail track in order to enhance safety, livability and economic development.

Port of Oakland Hosts China Symposium

The Port of Oakland and China Merchants Holdings International (CMHI) hosted a "China Briefing and Roundtable Discussion" as a continuation of the port's annual China symposium to raise awareness around U.S.-China trade issues and provide an opportunity for CMHI and other business partners to grow export-import trade opportunities.

The discussion covered: challenges for U.S. companies when they trade with China; China's shipping and logistics landscape; maritime and intermodal infrastructure and its impacts on sourcing and manufacturing in China; and cold chain development in the Chinese hinterland. Noted U.S. trade economist Dan Smith, principal of the Tioga Group, a freight transportation consulting service, also provided a forecast of 2012-2013 trade growth, based on consumer demand cycles in China and the United States, global currency valuations, and the shift in China's demographic profile.

This program is one of several initiatives launched jointly by the Port of Oakland and CMHI as a result of a memorandum of understanding signed in November 2010. The memorandum represents a strategic partnership for marketing cooperation to promote trade between the U.S. and China and to extend supply chain services for U.S. exporters throughout China, with a focus on U.S. agricultural and perishable food exports from Oakland to China's coastal and inland population centers.

Environmental Topics Dominate Warehouse Logistics Expo

"Going Green" is no longer a choice for supply chain managers – it's a given. Shareholder pressure is forcing publicly-held manufacturers to adhere to the highest levels of sustainability, said industry analysts and experts speaking last month at the International Warehouse Logistics Association 2012 Convention & Expo in San Francisco.

"As logistics providers we can't afford to wait for the government or its regulators to tell us how to be responsible corporate citizens," said IWLA President and CEO Joel Anderson. "Fortunately, we have not been standing still on this issue."

That point was reinforced by a panel of shippers, consultants, and academic leaders who addressed the association's "sustainable logistics initiative."

"This is not about 'tree-hugging,'" said Bruce Carlton, president and CEO of the National Industrial Transportation League. "When the league was asked to partner in this initiative, we recognized that this represents a unique metric-driven breakthrough. It's an ideal public/private solution to ongoing supply chain concerns."

Boat Maintenance Tips for a Cleaner Bay

BY DEB SELF

With Opening Day on the way, and the America's Cup around the corner, lots of folks—including Baykeeper—are busy with spring boat maintenance, all in preparation for a special boating season.

After a (second) four-year stint with silicone-based epoxy hull paint, our 19' C-Dory catamaran (with twin Hondas), The Baykeeper, is due for repainting. We've had her cleaned diligently every three weeks, in the hope of keeping aquatic growth to a minimum. Alas, our top speeds have diminished over time, despite the cleanings and weekly Bay patrols. So, we've decided to go back to a low-level (4 percent) zinc-based paint and we'll let you know how that goes.

In the meantime, Baykeeper has been busy helping boatyards and the Department of Toxic Substances Control develop best practices for hull work at boatyards, and I wanted to share with you some of the tips that are widely regarded as common sense for keeping pollution out of San Francisco Bay when you're doing maintenance.

Work on hulls coated with copper- and zinc-based bottom paints, and on the keels of sailboats, is a common source of copper, lead and zinc pollution to the Bay. These heavy metals are highly toxic to fish and aquatic life, and copper damages the sense of smell that migrating salmon need for locating their natal streams. The main way these pollutants make their way into the Bay is by rainwater flowing across work areas (sometimes long after the hull work is done) and carrying paint dust and chips into open storm drains or even directly into the Bay. It may not seem like a little dust could have such a big impact, but it really all adds up!

Prepping the Hull for Re-painting

- Pressure washing can dislodge a lot of paint from the hull, so if your boat is going to be pressure washed, make sure the designated area is paved (not over bare ground), away from the boat ramp, bermed and sloped to prevent wash water from escaping into the Bay.
- When prepping your boat for re-painting, remove old hull paint away from the water, under cover if possible.
- Sanding should be done away from waterways and drainage pathways, over a hard surface (or better yet, in a building with proper ventilation and air filtration).
- If you're sanding outside, a dustless vacuum sander is a necessity. Outside work areas can be vacuumed to avoid tracking pollutants throughout the boatyard or power washed to an adequate treatment system. Surfaces should not be swept; that just allows toxic dust to spread.
- Don't use paint strippers!
- If you've hauled your boat to do your own hull painting or mechanical work, place a tarp under the work area to catch paint chips and drips that could eventually wash into the Bay.
- Outside work should be cleaned up prior to high winds or rain, to minimize the chance of spreading pollution to the Bay and its tributaries (or storm drains).

Painting the Hull

- Use a tarp underneath to catch drips.
- Try to avoid traditional high-percentage copper and zinc paints that can leach high levels of heavy metals into the water, harming marine organisms. Also, avoid paints with bisphenol-A, a plasticizer that causes endocrine disruptions in animals.
- If you try a silicone-based or low-zinc hull paint, please let us know what you think.

Better Pollution Controls at Boatyards

Most Bay Area boatyards have drains that connect work areas to treatment systems, but sometimes these can be overwhelmed by heavy rains. To find out if your boatyard has adequate collection and treatment systems for contaminated runoff, ask your boatyard if they monitor their storm water for pollutants like copper, lead or zinc. It's required by law and is the only way to understand whether their practices and systems are adequately containing these highly toxic pollutants.

To learn more about Baykeeper's efforts to educate boaters and boatyards to protect the water quality of the Bay, please visit www.baykeeper.org. Happy Opening Day on the Bay!

We have won legal agreements that require 20 Bay Area cities and sewage districts to upgrade their systems to keep sewage from spilling into the Bay and waterways that lead to the Bay. Already, sewage spills are down by 50% in some locations.*

THE MARIN ISLANDS

BY CAPTAIN RAY

The Marin Islands, clearly hidden in plain sight, may be the least known of San Francisco Bay's scattering of islands. There are two of them, fittingly named East Marin and West Marin, and they are located about one and a half miles north of the western end of the Richmond/San Rafael Bridge.

Nautical charts give us very little information about these two small specks of land. The water surrounding them, called San Rafael Bay, is very shallow, generally one to two feet on the east side of the islands and four or five on the west. The chart shows a structure on East Marin Island, the larger of the two. You can see the islands as you drive across the Richmond/San Rafael Bridge; however, the closest shoreline view of them is from the breakwater protecting the Loch Lomond Marina.

These two islands and the surrounding submerged tidelands were designated the Marin Islands National Wildlife Refuge and State Ecological Reserve in 1992. The islands are the property of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service and special permission from the Service is required to visit them. The islands are mostly steep sided and covered with poison oak, so an unauthorized visit could be both difficult and unpleasant.

While the Refuge is small, about 350 acres, West Marin Island, which at 85 feet above sea level is the higher of the two, contains the largest egret and heron rookery in the San Francisco Bay area—and one of the largest in northern California. There are over 500 nesting pairs of great and snowy egrets, and great blue and black-crowned night herons. The shallow waters around the islands support a variety of resident and migratory fowl, including ospreys, black oystercatchers, surf scoters and diving ducks. Harbor seals also have been seen to haul out here.

Archaeological excavations conducted on East Marin Island have confirmed Native American presence on the islands. Radiocarbon dates of A.D. 210 and 720 suggest that the islands were visited for a long period of time. However, lack of human burials lead anthropologists to believe that the islands were visited only seasonally and there was never permanent human occupation.

In 1926, Thomas Crowley purchased the islands at auction for $25,000. He was speculating that they would be used in the construction of a bridge across San Pablo Strait, connecting Marin to Contra Costa counties. When a different route—one not utilizing the islands—was selected for the Richmond/San Conservancy, the Trust for Public Land, as well as the local citizenry and more than a dozen other organizations and agencies. In the summer of 1992, the Crowley family sold the islands to the State of California. Title was then transferred to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the refuge established.

The current management of the islands by the Service is focused on two areas: preventing human disturbance of the heron and egret rookery and monitoring the rookery with annual surveys. Future plans call for a system of buoys to warn boaters about the rookery and the removal of all nonnative vegetation and all structures.

In 1926, Thomas Crowley purchased the islands at auction for $25,000. He was speculating that they would be used in the construction of a bridge across San Pablo Strait, connecting Marin to Contra Costa counties.

Rafael Bridge, they became a Crowley family vacation get-away spot for more than 60 years.

Around-the-World Boat Racers to Stop in Oakland

The Clipper 11-12 Race fleet departs Qingdao, China en route to Oakland for the start the sixth leg of the race around the world. Crossing the Pacific Ocean is one of the toughest and longest stages of the race.

BC STAFF REPORT

The entire Bay Area sailing community will join forces in April to welcome and host the 250-plus crew members of the Clipper Round the World Yacht Race when they dock at Oakland's Jack London Square. The 10 racing yachts departed Qingdao, China on March 4, to head across the pounding Pacific Ocean for leg 6 of the around-the-world race, and are expected to arrive at Jack London Square sometime between April 2 and 7, weather permitting.

Every two years the Clipper racers set off from England in a matched fleet of stripped-down 68-foot racing yachts to travel around the world. They make their triumphant return twelve months later—having crossed the Atlantic, Pacific and Southern Oceans.

The Clipper 2011-12 Race fleet of 10 yachts will be on display at the 2012 Strictly Sail Pacific Boat Show, which will take place in Jack London Square from Thursday, April 12 to Sunday, April 15. The public will have an opportunity to board a Clipper Race Yacht, talk to crew members, and take part in the official sendoff celebrations on Saturday, April 14, when the race will continue.

“This is one of the toughest and longest stages of the race,” said Clipper Race Director Jonathan Bailey. “In previous editions, the crews have taken quite a pounding on their Pacific crossing, so they will all be looking forward to the warm welcome awaiting them in Oakland.”

The Clipper Race is crewed by amateurs, from all walks of life, who undergo extensive training before embarking on their challenge under the watchful eye of professional skippers. This is the eighth edition of the biennial event, which was established in 1996 by British sailing legend Sir Robin Knox-Johnston, the first person to sail solo, non-stop around the world.

The race track is 40,000 miles long and it takes 11 months to complete the circumnavigation. The race is divided into a series of eight legs and crews can decide to race one of them, select a combination of legs or sign up to become a round-the-world crew member and complete the full circumnavigation.

For this Clipper Race, the crews have already traveled from the U.K. to mainland Europe, then across the Atlantic Ocean to South America, having crossed the Equator along the way. From there, they traveled on to South Africa, to the west coast of Australia, then to New Zealand and the east coast of Australia. Then, they headed north and west towards Singapore, followed by China. After stopping in Oakland, they will head south to the Panama Canal, witnessing first hand one of man's greatest engineering triumphs. Once through the canal, the race heads north to New York and Canada, before heading back across the Atlantic Ocean to Europe once more.

There are 15 individual races in total and, just like in Formula 1, points are awarded at the end of each race, building towards a championship total. It means that a crew can put a poor result behind them and head to the start of the next race with the possibility of gaining maximum points. With all boats identical and budgets equal, no one has a head start. It's the ultimate long-distance match race and the winners are those who keep their focus the longest.

“Oakland celebrates a long history of trade with China, and I cannot think of a more perfect location than Strictly Sail Pacific and Jack London Square, named after the author, sailor and adventurer Jack London, to host the Clipper 11-12 Round the World Yacht Race,” said Oakland Mayor Jean Quan. “This is an amazing opportunity for the entire Bay Area to get up-close with the crew and yachts that are competing in this one-of-a-kind race around the world.”

Catch the Spirit at This Year's Opening Day

The decorated boat parade and blessing of the fleet are the main events at Opening Day on the Bay. This year spectators will gather along Crissy field on Sunday, April 29 to view the parade from noon to 3 p.m.

BY APRIL THYGESON

San Francisco Bay offers some of the best boating in the world. In the summer, when the weather is warm and the wind is up, boats flock to the water like geese to a pond. To commemorate the beginning of the boating season, the Pacific Inter-Club Yacht Association (PICYA) hosts a high-spirited celebration. This year, Sunday, April 29 marks the 95th annual Opening Day on the Bay.

Whether you live aboard or have never set foot on a boat, there are many ways for you and your family to enjoy the festivities. Yacht clubs and marinas will be bustling with celebrants. Sailboats, powerboats, tugboats, kayaks and even paddle boarders will pepper the water. Hydrophiles and boating enthusiasts will be out in full force in celebration of water recreation.

The main event is the decorated boat parade and blessing of the fleet. From noon to 3 p.m., spectators will gather at Crissy Field to watch over 120 yachts strut their stuff in single file along the San Francisco waterfront. This year's theme is "American Spirit," with an aim towards celebrating the many people and properties that make San Francisco so unique. The first female tugboat captain on the Bay, Jan Tiura, is this year's grand marshal. Workboats, towboats, fireboats, classic boats and modern boats will all be competing for the distinction of best decorated.

Last year's theme was "Giants of the Bay," which was a nod to San Francisco's baseball team. The Giants' recent World Series win added to the revelatory spirit of the day and the boats were impressively adorned. There was

No matter if it is a pleasure cruise on the Potomac (background) or spending the day on a fishing boat out of Fisherman's Wharf, there is something for everybody on San Francisco Bay.

If you're in the East Bay, the USS Potomac, F.D.R.'s presidential yacht, will be hosting a "Characters of the Bay" cruise. Board the "floating White House" in Jack London Square and spend three hours on the water with some of the Bay Area's most noteworthy and entertaining characters. A gourmet boxed lunch will be also be served. Visit www.usspotomac.org for more information.

Should you be looking for a more hands-on maritime experience, go over to the Treasure Island Sailing Center to take advantage of their free sailboat rides, kayaking, and stand-up paddle boarding. There will be music, games, and activities for the whole family, with a BBQ lunch available for $3 per person.

Maybe you're a landlubber who would prefer to stay as dry as possible. If so, grab some friends and head down to pretty much any waterfront eatery. Sam's Anchor Café in Tiburon was teeming with revelers on Opening Day last year. Even if you went by yourself, you were bound to make some new friends.

No matter what your boating experience, the energy of the day will likely inspire you to learn more about boating, and there are plenty of schools on the Bay that can help you do just that. For an introduction to sailing or to hone your skipper skills, try OCSC Sailing, located in the Berkeley marina. The school's location means it gets the best wind available and it has been turning out highly competent sailors for over thirty years. Club Nautique, Tradewinds Sailing, Modern Sailing and Spinnaker Sailing are other good options. Club Nautique also offers charters and lessons in powerboating.

The San Francisco Bay is the great unifier among us Bay Area residents. No matter what your level of familiarity with life on the water, don't miss the opportunity to celebrate its pleasures with your community on April 29. Whether you spend Opening Day on a ship or on the shore, remember to be safe, stay hydrated, wear sunscreen and have fun!

Clean Marinas Program Helps Ensure Environmentally Responsible Boating

BY BILL PICTURE

Pollution in the Bay is a top concern of many Bay Area residents, but the search for a culprit is sometimes, well, as murky as the Bay's waters.

Is it storm runoff, which carries a veritable laundry list of land-borne contaminants, some of them highly toxic, from a variety of sources into the Bay via storm drains and Bay-feeding watercourses? Is it the many, many large freight vessels passing through the Golden Gate each day? Is it the pleasure craft that dart past us as we take in a sweeping view of the Bay from our favorite vantage point? Is it the untreated sewage discharge from thousands of liveaboards who call Bay Area marinas home?

It's all of those, said Emery Cove Yacht Harbor's harbormaster Diane Isley. "The liveaboards have been taking the heat lately, but it's not fair to point the finger just at them," she said. "As a rule, I'd say the liveaboards are the most conscientious."

Still, Isley said it only take a few irresponsible marina tenants dumping untreated sewage directly into the water to spoil it for the rest of the floating bunch. Bay pollution watchdog Baykeeper estimates there are enough bad apples living on the Bay to warrant serious concern. But without hard numbers, the claim falls largely on deaf ears, at least within the liveboard community, amongst whose members it has aroused ire lately.

Isley wishes there were data available, so that stakeholders in a clean Bay could know once and for all who the worst culprits are, and then decide on an effective course of action. The problem is, the agencies in charge of keeping the Bay and other waterways free of pollution are underfunded

Emery Cove Yacht Harbor is a 430-slip dockminium marina located on the Emeryville Peninsula. A dockminium is a marina that allows tenants to purchase their slips. Emery Cove Yacht Harbor is the only marina in the Bay Area offering the possibility of owning your own boat slip in a 100 percent fee title ownership.

as it is, and it seems unlikely that a study of specific point sources is imminent.

Thus, claims being volleyed back and forth between regulators and concerned Bay-lovers on one side, and harbormasters and boat owners on the other side, rely heavily on anecdotal evidence. Some of the debates make even Isley, who's been a harbormaster for 25 years and said she's seen just about everything, wince.

"I've heard some real horror stories, and some of them are probably true," she said. "But I'd still say that the liveaboards are only a part of a problem."

Because the in-charge agencies are short on the wherewithal to regulate, the responsibility for enforcement has fallen largely on harbormasters, many of whom are also stretched too thin to play water-quality police.

"The boat owners should really be taking responsibility for themselves, but self-policing doesn't always work," Isley said. "In order for that to really work, the marina owners, the harbormasters and the boat owners really need to work together as a solid, effectively self-regulating group."

While they wait for the boat-owning masses to get onboard, a growing group of marina owners and harbormasters has created the Clean Marina program. Using boater education as a key tool, the 100-plus member marinas in California employ program-prescribed best management practices that help prevent or reduce pollution and earn the marinas points toward Clean Marina certification. Many Bay Area marinas currently carry the Clean Marina designation but several notable local marinas have so far chosen not to participate.

Isley helped earn Emery Cove its certification. The Indiana native, who had a Los Angeles-to-New Zealand sailing trip under her seafaring belt before settling in the Bay Area in 1986, runs a tight ship when it comes to the marina under her charge.

For those boat owners who use their on-board heads, Isley requires that they call her from the marina's pump-out station so that she can keep track of how often they are pumping out, or provide proof that a mobile pump-out service was contracted. She also performs an annual check of each boat to ensure that its y-valve is secured in the closed position. An open y-valve allows sewage to be discharged directly into the water.

In addition to allowing harbormasters to control the quality of the water in their own marinas, Isley said the measures afford a great opportunity for harbormasters to educate their tenants.

"It's a good time to talk to your tenants about the laws and regulations, which are updated pretty regularly," she said. "That's particularly important with new boaters and weekend boaters, who aren't as familiar with the laws as the old-timers. I'm more concerned about new boaters and weekend boaters than I am about the liveaboards."

"I know that many harbormasters are sort of at their limit, workload-wise; but it really only takes a few minutes," she said. "And it gives me something to help prove to the powers-that-be that we're complying with the rules if we're ever challenged."

The Clean Marina program proved to be a very effective tool when regulators recently attempted to throw new fees at the problem of pollution from marinas. Those fees would have cost marinas hundreds of thousands of dollars.

"Marina owners and boat owners already pay so much in fees," she said. "In fact, we already pay for water monitoring when we dredge."

The group was able to shoot down the additional charges, for now at least, by providing detailed documentation proving their compliance with laws pertaining to the handling of sewage on small vessels. "That's what you need, to be able to provide documentation like we did," she said. "You have to be organized."

In exchange for temporarily dropping talk of added fees, the state came up with a list of additional points that it wants folded in to the Clean Marina program. Isley said that Clean Marina's president, Tim Leathers, is working now to incorporate those points.

"I don't think the issue is completely dead," she added. "So the key is to be proactive. And educating and raising consciousness within the boating community is important."

Final America's Cup Deal Means Significant Cuts

BC STAFF REPORT

The head of the organization spearheading the America's Cup in San Francisco said that they will support the deal that the office of Mayor Edwin M. Lee submitted to the Board in March, which was approved unanimously. This finalizes the path for the City of San Francisco to host the world's most prestigious sailing event, the America's Cup, in San Francisco during the summer of 2013. An official statement released by the America's Cup Event Authority (ACEA) said, "It's an arrangement we can live with, but not what we expected."

"We have worked very hard to bring this historic race to San Francisco and we're glad we have reached an agreement with the City," said Stephen Barclay, a director of the America's Cup Event Authority. "While we support the deal submitted to the Board, it is not what we had anticipated or planned for."

Barclay said the new deal falls short on several key provisions that were "anticipated to be included and the absence of these provisions will have a negative impact on the financial outcome of the event. "While far from ideal, we're just pleased to be done so we can move away from deal points and start focusing on the races and the competition between the teams, which is what the Louis Vuitton Cup and America's Cup is all about."

The new deal calls for the ACEA to spend more and be reimbursed less. The deal also re-instates Piers 30/32 as the location for the America's Cup Team Bases, giving the race a central area for the teams and a "pit row" for spectators. Renovations to Piers 30/32 were removed from a previous plan that Mayor Lee was considering and would have forced Team Bases to be located at Pier 80. The fan access to Team Bases on Piers 30/32, combined with the America's Cup Village at Piers 27/29 and the natural sailing amphitheater of the Bay will make the event's footprint more compact and will benefit the teams as well as the general public.

Shortly after these changes were introduced, ACEA, the commercial arm of the sport, announced that they will lead to organizational changes and staff reductions at the Event Authority due in part to downsizing of the event footprint in San Francisco. The reductions impacted 14 in San Francisco and another 14 staff at other offices around the world that were laid off.

"These individuals have been valued members of our team since the start of the Event Authority and have made many valuable contributions to our organization, and we wish them all of the best in their future endeavors," said Barclay. He said severance packages were in place for the departing employees when they were informed of the staff reductions.

"We must ensure that our expenses match revenues. We made these changes to create efficiencies necessary to ensure that we deliver an exciting and important event for both the world of competitive sailing and San Francisco," Barclay added.

He said the America's Cup Event Authority was pleased it had reached a new agreement with the City of San Francisco. The financial package is "not what we had anticipated or planned for but we are moving forward because this sailing event will be fantastic for the teams, sailors around the world and all San Francisco."

Racing is set to kick off this year with the America's Cup World Series events, the first of which will be in Naples, Italy April 11-15 followed by events in Venice, Italy (May) and Newport, Rhode Island (June).

Coming to you live

For those not able to view the race in person, this Cup sees the return to live national television, with NBC Sports Group to broadcast over-the-air in the U.S. for the first time in more than 20 years.

"The broadcast interest is a reflection of the exciting venue, technological advancements of the boats, and, most importantly technological advances in cinematography that capture this race like never before," said Barclay.

Live from New York, it's...

...not going to be the America's Cup! On the heels of the NBC deal, several news organizations reported that ACEA was back in New York City shopping one of the World Series races originally scheduled for this August in San Francisco. This was confirmed by posts on the official website for America's Cup saying that the event in August would occur in San Francisco or New York but adding another World Series event in San Francisco in October.

Barclay was quoted as saying, "Having these things race around the Statue of Liberty would engage the East Coast." However, he also mentioned that New York had already passed when previously approached with the idea. Apparently not much has changed, because the idea has been dropped and now www.americascup.com has both the August (21-26) and October (4-7) World Series events scheduled for San Francisco.

"We are thrilled that, in addition to the Louis Vuitton Cup and the America's Cup racing in 2013, that the America's Cup World Series will also take place in San Francisco in 2012," said Mayor Edwin Lee. "This will add even more visitors, jobs and economic development as part of hosting one of the world's premier sporting events."

We've been told that the 34th America's Cup is expected to generate over a billion dollars in economic benefits for San Francisco during the next two years and will draw millions of fans and spectators and more than 1,000 accredited news media for the races. However, with the recent changes to the agreement with the City of San Francisco and reports of less-than-expected turnouts at some of the World Series venues, some are beginning to question whether the whole event has been overhyped.

Sharing time with whales is a privilege.

Artemis Racing Debuts Full Scale AC72 Wing

The culmination of more than 35,000 man hours and a tremendous amount of hard work on the part of the entire team came on March 15 when Artemis Racing sailed with the team's first AC72 wing in Valencia, Spain.

While the Defender and other Challengers for the 34th America's Cup have chosen to train and test elements for the AC72 catamarans using smaller boats, specifically AC45 and SL33 catamarans, Artemis Racing opted to build a full size wing from the outset.

"We chose the full scale strategy. Our decision was more time consuming, but it allows us to learn how to handle this powerful wing. Before performance, there is the safety of our team. San Francisco Bay in July and August is an unforgiving place," said CEO Paul Cayard.

Towering more than 13 stories high, the AC72 wing is a pure work of art. The 130 foot high structure, predominantly built of carbon fiber, measures over 850 square feet yet weighs just over one metric ton.

"It was a team effort. It was amazing to see the wing out on the water. It looks great, but at the same time threatening. We will be going through a series of structural tests in the next few days," said Principal Designer Juan Kouyoumdjian.

This is Artemis Racing's first entry to the America's Cup.

Boat Owners May Have Federal Tax Deductions Available

Recreational boat owners who paid state sales taxes on a boat purchase, or those who secured a loan to finance a boat, may have some tax deductions coming to them when filing their 2011 federal income tax return. This tax tip comes from the nation's largest boaters' advocacy group, Boat Owners Association of the United States (BoatUS).

The Sales Tax Deduction

For boat owners who paid substantial state sales taxes on a new or used boat purchase last year, the Tax Extenders Act of 2008 continues to offer a federal tax deduction for state sales taxes. Boaters must choose either the state sales tax deduction or state income tax deduction on their federal tax return—you cannot take both.

In addition, to take the state sales tax deduction, the sales tax on a boat purchase must be applied at the same tax rate as the state's general sales tax. In order to claim the sales tax deduction, tax returns must be itemized. State sales taxes are entered on IRS form Schedule A, line 5b.

The Boat Loan Deduction

For those owners with a secured boat loan, mortgage interest paid on the loan may be deducted from your federal income taxes. Taxpayers may use the home mortgage interest deduction for one second home in addition to their primary home, and must itemize deductions on their returns. A boat is considered a second home for federal tax purposes if it has a galley, an installed head and sleeping berth.

During federal budget negotiations last year, Congress sought to eliminate this deduction for boat owners while keeping it in place for second home and recreational vehicle owners. BoatUS lobbied aggressively for a more equitable all-or-nothing approach when applying the deduction, and boaters did not get unfairly singled out.

Some boaters may be unaware of this potential tax benefit because not all lending institutions send borrowers an Internal Revenue Service form 1098, which reports the interest paid. Not receiving the form does not preclude taking the deduction. If a 1098 is not available, boaters should contact their lender for the amount of interest paid and should enter it on line 11 on Schedule A along with the lender's tax ID number. If a form 1098 is sent, boaters should simply enter the amount on line 10 of Schedule A.

Sorry, AMT

For those who fall under the alternative minimum tax, most deductions are unavailable. Boaters are urged to contact a tax preparer or financial advisor for more information.

For more details on the mortgage deduction on boats that qualify, go to www.IRS.gov and download Publication 936 or the Fact Sheets. For state tax deduction information, download Publication 600, which also includes state-by-state tax tables.

Ferry Service Between South S.F. and East Bay Set for June Launch

BC STAFF REPORT

San Francisco Bay Ferry's much-anticipated service between South San Francisco and the East Bay will be launching soon. With construction almost complete on the new South San Francisco ferry terminal at Oyster Point, the service will provide access to biotech and other jobs in South San Francisco for East Bay commuters as well as expand the geographic reach of emergency ferry response capabilities on San Francisco Bay.

The new service will operate Monday through Friday during peak commute periods between Alameda Main Street, Oakland's Jack London Square, and the new South San Francisco Oyster Point ferry terminal with three to four departures from the East Bay and three to four departures from South San Francisco. The proposed date for service to begin is June 4 and the transit time is expected to be approximately 40 minutes from the East Bay to Oyster Point.

The service will provide access to biotech and other jobs in South San Francisco for East Bay commuters.

A one-way adult fare of $7 has been proposed and the Clipper Card can be used as well as cash. Free parking will be available for East Bay commuters and free shuttles to and from employers in the East Bay are planned. Bay Crossings will feature more on this exciting new service in next month's issue. San Francisco Bay Ferry is a service of the Water Emergency Transportation Authority.

CULTURAL CURRENTS

Destination: L.A.

BY PAUL DUCLOS

San Pedro Bay culture hardly measures up to what we have here, but Bay Crossings readers seeking a quick getaway from the waterfront might wish to explore a contrasting—and convenient—alternative.

Virgin America is the way to go if you are searching for a direct flight from San Francisco. The airline's new terminal at SFO is bright, clean and as tranquil as a ferry ride across the Bay. LAX is a different story, of course, but it's easy enough to get out of there if you arrive in the morning and head directly downtown.

"Downtown?" you ask. Yes, there's been a rebirth of sorts in the City of Angels, becoming a genuine destination for seekers of fine dining, art, literature, and world-class opera.

While the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra (housed in the stunningly beautiful silver-winged Walt Disney Concert Hall) has been getting most of the press of late, opera lovers would do well by taking in at least one performance this season at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion. With chandeliers, wide curving stairways and one of the largest stages in the country, it has proven itself as an important part of Los Angeles history. Its rich décor intrigued the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and provided the perfect setting for the Academy Awards 24 times during the 20th century.

Last month, the nation's fourth-largest opera company staged Benjamin Britten's Albert Herring. First performed in 1947, this comic piece takes place in the English countryside, where Albert, a meek mama's boy, reluctantly becomes his village's first May King when no maidens of sufficient virtue can be found. After his friends ply him with liquid courage at the coronation ceremony, Albert discovers the nerve to assert himself for the first time in his life. A nice departure from Britten's deeply disturbing Billy Budd and Peter Grimes—two classics set in maritime cultures.

Next month the company will end its current season with La Boheme, the quintessential bohemian love story. www.laopera.com

The Museum of Contemporary Art (MOCA) just down the street is the opening the first solo museum exhibition of artist Cai Guo-Qiang and experience the debut of his site-specific work created for MOCA, Mystery Circle: Explosion Event.

Mystery Circle will contain three stages of special pyrotechnics, which will be ignited at a special event for museum members on April 7. At dusk, a myriad of flying saucer girandolas will rise from the rooftop. At the moment of ignition, countless mini rockets forming a string of crop circles will launch toward the audience before falling to the ground. An imaginary alien-god figure on the left side of the wall will be outlined from bottom to top by gunpowder fuses. When the burned fuses reach the "halo" of the figure, mini rockets will shoot into the air. The rockets will leave a burned imprint on the museum wall, creating an outdoor drawing.

While Cai's signature explosion events, "Project for Extraterrestrials," have been dedicated to the creatures from outer space, his new project at MOCA will be the first time an alien figure actually appears.

The exhibition, on view at MOCA Grand Avenue from April 8 through July 30, will also include three gunpowder drawings commissioned by MOCA, created on-site in March 2012 by Cai in collaboration with more than 100 local volunteers. www.moca.org

Lovers of more antiquarian art, meanwhile, may wish to explore the stacks at Caravan Book Store a short stroll away on Grand Avenue. Shop owner Leonard Bernstein is a pleasant and attentive fellow who knows his inventory and can guide you to even the most arcane piece of literature. (213) 626-9944.

I was staying just across the street at the newly restored Hilton Checkers Los Angeles Hotel. Like Caravan, this represents a "vintage" piece in the urban landscape. But it is not a dowdy boutique by any means. It offers extensive hotel luxuries, and has a rooftop patio that is a destination in and of itself. The L.A. skyline is fully revealed in all its brassy glory, and at night, the city takes on another layer of mystery and intrigue. www.hiltoncheckers.com

The hotel has a fine restaurant, but I recommend the Water Grill across the street. Established in 1989, this place is a lot like some of the older San Francisco fish joints, but far less formal. The raw oyster bar is a revelation, and the wine list superb. www.watergrill.com

San Francisco Increases Access for Bikers Commuting to Work

Last month, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors approved the Employee Bicycle Access Bill, which will make it easier for the growing number of people biking to work to bring their bikes into the workplace. The bill then went to the mayor's office, where it is expected to be signed into law. Once official, San Francisco will have the strongest bicycle access law in the country.

The Employee Bicycle Access Bill would require the owners of commercial buildings to either provide secure bicycle parking in their buildings or to allow their commercial tenants to bring their bicycles directly into their offices upon request.

Current San Francisco law requires that new commercial buildings include bicycle parking. This new bicycle access legislation ensures that tenants in both new and older buildings have secure parking.

Building owners, employers, commercial real estate agents and bicycle advocates are all lauding the bill as a simple way to provide safe, secure bicycle parking for the growing number of people commuting by bicycle. The Bicycle Access Bill passage comes on the heels of the just-released 2011 SFMTA Bicycle Count Report that showed a dramatic 71 percent increase in the number of people biking in San Francisco in the last five years. Commercial corridors, like Market Street and Townsend Street, saw some of the largest growth.

"This is a great way to ensure secure bicycle parking for the huge and growing number of people biking in San Francisco," said Leah Shahum, executive director of the San Francisco Bicycle Coalition, a 12,000-member nonprofit. "One of the top reasons people cite for not biking to work more often is lack of secure parking for their bike."

The bicycle access legislation has support from building owners and managers across the city who already see providing bicycle parking as a key factor in attracting and keeping quality tenants and encouraging more biking to work.

Nino Rodriguez, commercial property manager of Westfield's 835 Market Street, knows firsthand how bicycle parking has impacted his building. "Being able to provide a place for employees to park their bikes every day has really had a positive impact on our tenants and their employees. We have many users who ride their bike daily or a few times a week, bring their bikes in the front door and into our storage area. They are happy to have a secure place to keep their bike during the workday."

"This bill is a simple, cost-effective way to help San Francisco businesses meet the growing need for secure bicycle parking that their employees crave, and help San Francisco reach the City's official goal of 20 percent of trips by bike by 2020," said Supervisor John Avalos, who introduced the bill.

AROUND THE BAY IN APRIL

Sail on Sailor

The 2012 Strictly Sail Pacific all-sailboat boat show will sail into Jack London Square April 12-15 with everything that is hot in the world of sailing. Strictly Sail Pacific is the only all-sailboat show on the West Coast, featuring new sailboats, gear, accessories, hardware, daily seminars, interactive workshops, free sailboat rides and more. Sailboats of every size and budget will fill the grounds of Jack London Square, both in and out of the water including sleek racers and luxury yachts. From newbies to serious sailors, Strictly Sail Pacific is the place for people who love to immerse themselves in the sailing lifestyle, talk to experts, participate in hands-on seminars, learn new sailing techniques, and more. Additionally, the boat show will host the official stopover of the Clipper 11-12 Round the World Yacht Race (see pages 10-11). Show attendees are invited to climb aboard the 68-ft Clipper racing yachts, talk to crew members competing in the yearlong round the world journey and join the special send-off of the 10-yacht race fleet on Saturday, April 14. Ticket prices range from $15 for one day to $45 for a four-day pass with children 15 and under free with a paying adult. For more information, visit www.strictlysailpacific.com.

Richmond Gets Silly

Come join the all-singing, all-dancing, no-trans fat Sixth Annual Richmond Silly Parade on Saturday, April 14 from 11:00 – 11:39 a.m. at the intersection of 23rd and Macdonald Ave. in downtown Richmond (rain date April 21). March or crowd the sidewalk and overwhelm the participants with your laughter and cheers. The Richmond Silly Parade was originally conceived as a parody of marching parades but its real purpose was to build community by using humor as rebar. The parade has become a celebration of people's energy, imagination, pride, and initiative featuring musical groups, sports teams and civic organizations along with a generous helping of old-fashioned fun. Previous marches have included the Senior Citizen Dry-Water Swim Team, Rosie the Riveter Park Rangers, pets in costume, giant puppets, the Iron Triangle Philharmonic, the Marching Moustaches and Mother Earth herself. This year they hope to add a gospel choir, a toddler contingent (1-5 years), kids wearing their Halloween costumes (6-12 years), stilt walkers, floats, high school marching bands, a Dog Lovers Brigade, street ballet, the Wind Chime Orchestra, and you getting in touch with your Inner Silly. For questions, free parade ideas, and to sign up, ring the Silly Parade Committee at (510) 235-5519, or email richmondsillyparade@gmail.com. Be there or be oblong.

Calling All Canines!

Is your dog darling, dashing, well dressed and deserving of recognition? Then get your entry form in now for the 3rd Annual Barkers by the Bay Cutest Canine Contest. The event takes place on Saturday, April 21 from 3-6 p.m. at Gabrielson Park in downtown Sausalito and is free to attend. The Parade of Pooches before the esteemed panel of judges begins promptly at 3:30 p.m. and a K-9 Karnival with vendors offering canine-related products and services will be ongoing all afternoon. Fabulous prizes will be awarded for Best of Show Cutest Canine, Best Dressed Doggie, Cutest Canine Couple and People's Choice Pup. Applications for the contest and for K-9 Karnival booth space may be downloaded from the Sausalito Chamber of Commerce website www.sausalito.org and must be received by Monday, April 9. The Spinnaker Restaurant is the Top Dog Sponsor of this year's event and will be hosting the Fido's fan club ballot box and voting for the People's Choice

Pup category as well as Hound Dog Happy Hours on Friday, April 13 and Friday, April 20. Entries for all categories except People's Choice will be accepted the day of the event but advance registration is required in order to receive a commemorative Barkers Bag and bandana.

This is for the Birdathon

Bored with bike-a-thons, walkathons and swim-a-thons? Try a Birdathon—the annual fundraising event for Golden Gate Audubon Society, held throughout the month of April. Birdathon 2012 is a uniquely Audubon way to promote and protect the Bay Area's native birds and wildlife—it's like a walk-a-thon, only we count beautiful bird species instead of miles. You can join a guided bird walk led by an expert naturalist, form a team and compete to spot the most birds, or organize a "big sit" with friends to count birds in one place over four hours. No matter how you choose to participate, the money raised will help Golden Gate Audubon protect local wildlife and educate the next generation of environmental leaders. So have fun outdoors and win prizes. Learn to identify the birds of the Bay Area. And raise money for a good, green cause. For information and registration, see the Golden Gate Audubon Birdathon web site at www.birdathon.dojiggy.com or call (510) 843-7293.

Help Cleanup State Parks for Earth Day

Volunteers are needed at California State Parks on Saturday, April 14 for the 15th Annual California State Parks Foundation's (CSPF) Earth Day Restoration & Cleanup presented by Pacific Gas and Electric Company (PG&E). This year, in celebration of its 15th Annual Earth Day, CSPF is providing grants up to $15,000 (a combination of cash grants and in-kind donations) to parks, allowing for larger renovation and repair projects to be made that have been on maintenance backlog. California State Parks needs this annual cleanup, especially at a time when continued budget cuts significantly delay or eliminate environmental improvement and maintenance projects. Businesses and individuals of all ages are sought to actively participate with their communities to help restore the beauty of California's treasured state parks. Some Bay Area locations include Angel Island, Martin Luther Regional Shoreline and Candlestick Point State Recreation Area. Individuals, groups or businesses interested in volunteering on Earth Day should register at www.calparks.org/programs/earthday or call 1-888-98-PARKS.

To All America's Cup Enthusiasts,

Like everyone in the San Francisco Bay Area who is passionate about sailing, we at The Bay Maritime Group are delighted and excited by the choice of San Francisco for the 34th America's Cup. We know that many members of the Superyacht community have made the decision to visit San Francisco to watch the races, and we are actively preparing to welcome each and every boat to the Bay Area. We invite all yacht owners and captains, and yacht management groups, to visit our facilities in Alameda, Treasure Island and Point Richmond, and we will do everything we can do make your stay a memorable one.

The Bay Maritime Group offers many important advantages to support the servicing and refit of any yacht project. Our management team provides years of experience in the supervision of vessel design/build contracts and Superyacht refit and maintenance projects. Further, we offer the capabilities that are only available through a full service ship repair company with the experience and resources necessary to successfully accomplish every element of a Superyacht refit.

We look forward to hearing from you, and invite you to visit our facilities.
